Pickle processing tips

Pickle process

By C.THERINE R. MAUCK

Madlson County Extension

This summer, you may be thinking about some of the different kind of pickles you can make your queumbers. Here are several jointers to help insure good quality pickles. Here are several floatners to help insure good quality pickles you can make your queumbers. For help insure good quality pickles you can be processing is recommended for most pickle products. This is to destroy organisms that may cause spoilage and to inactivate enaryments that may affect flavor, color, and texture.

A builing wanteful of host processing, Usually, you begin counting time when the water returns to a boil after the filled jars have been placed in the water. However, for fermented cucumber pickles and fresh packed dills, start to count the water. However, for fermented cucumber pickles and fresh packed dills, start to count the boiling water. This will prevent a cooked flavor and loss of crispness.

Avoid using chippedenameled ware, copper, brass, avoid using up-to-date procedures are used. However, if you use alum to make unfermented pickles crips and hard, the area control and hard, the area control and hard, the area control and the second and the second and the second alum per quart of pickling liquid. Too much alum will give a bitter flavor.

Be sure to use pure granulated salt if it is available. Granulated salt if it is available. Granulated salt if it is available. Granulated salt if it is available at a control and the second salt on the second salt of prevent caking may make the brine cloudy. Use the vinegar full strength unless the recipe specifies that it be diluted, or slippery or soft unless the recipe specifies that it be diluted, or slippery or soft pickles may resulf. Be sure to use modern, tested recipes when precling to insure good quality resulfs every time.

SUPER SHOE—Nancy Smith of Edwerdsville, who is majoring in history at Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville, compares her five-and-one-half shoe size with the 10-footer designed and built of sisal fabric by Rod Otten, an SIUE art major-from St. Louis (1205 Kilgore Dr.). Otten used 100 pounds, or more than 65,000 feet, of fabric in weaving the art piece which he calls his "tennis shoe." The work required 10 weeks to complete.

Political chicanery has a long history in Illinois. Election buying, vote fraud, and obstruction of justice occurred all too frequenty, and only in rare instances did public reaction lead to real change. Two important reforms, however chican to real change. Two important reforms, however of "politics as usual".

Government operation or subsidy of local ambulances?

It is appropriate that Madison County and municipal officials are studying advantages, disadvantages and other aspects of providing ambulance service in the Quad-Cities.

Five existing funeral homes hope to discontinue their ambulance operations by Cot. 1 or shortly thereafter, and a new mortuary that is preparing to open has one ambulance and proposes to add a second in the future.

Estimates indicate that six ambulances may be needed to serve the local community, taking into account the poscibilive.

native, but they nevertheless do feel the necessity of bringing their ambulance activities to a halt soon.

When funeral home representatives and public officials met in June, they discussed the possibility of joint or invividual county, city or hospital involvement in managing a new Quad-city ambulance enterprise, perhaps utilizing firefighters. Precisely how this would be done has not been resolved, come method might involve two or aftree base locations and a single telepathone number. The concept it is important that victims received prompt and correct assistance at the scene and enroute, as well as after reaching a hospital or medical office. Nevertheless, it would be unfortunate if the program is "enhanced" to the point that the community no longer can provide it or afford it.

A possible compromise solution might involve continuation of two or three private and the scene and enroute. While this might seem awkward and would require complicated procedural agreements, it might prove to be cheaper and better than a 100 per bent government all ambulance service.

Worthwhile audit goals on control of state property

Press-Record Sorinafield Burcau—An audit report, critical of the Illinois Department. of General Sewices, has provided useful ideas for improvement which may be difficult to implement considering the state's current financial situation.

Written by Auditor General Robert G-Cronson, the report is based on an audit conducted by a private firm under state
